A Message From the President

The past year has been an extraordinarily good one for Tulane. For whatever reason, most members of the Tulane community were happier to be here this year than at any time during the recent past, and prouder as well.

The factors contributing to the heightened sense of community are too numerous for me to list, but a few deserve mention. The football team's remarkable success brought us together in a new way last fall and reminded us of all the other exciting things going on at Tulane. We also received substantial challenge grants from the Mellon Foundation and the National Endowment for the Humanities, grants whose effects will soon be visible throughout the University.

One of our students received a Luce Fellowship, the first we have ever received, and another Tulanian was a finalist in the competition. A third student received a Thomas Watson Fellowship. These awards, coming on top of our first Rhodes Scholarship and Nobel Prize, both awarded in the last three years, are clear indications that the academic community recognizes our strong claim to national prominence. There is a sense of forward movement on the Tulane campus, movement captured and preserved in The Jambalaya. Enjoy it.

The Year

AUGUST

Tulane University, like the city to which it is undeniably bound, combines a desire to uphold the traditions of the past with a commitment to prepare for the future. Students continually evaluate the university and their input is vital to its development. The 1979-80 school year has been a period of growth for Tulane, as students and administrators, united by a contagious enthusiasm, have substantially improved the school.

Eric Olans

Coming back to school in August is always reassuringly typical for upperclassmen. Fraternity members invade Butler and J.L. dorms, staggering under the weight of suitcases, offering their porter services in hopes of picking up tips, or preferably phone numbers. As upperclassmen, we greet each other, grumbling about the humidity, summer jobs, and the hordes of incoming freshmen that have invaded the campus. Orientation leaders walking around with groups of freshmen look like they wish someone would ask a question. Torrential rain during registration officially starts the new semester.

Earlier in August, Tulane fell under the national spotlight because of a Playboy article entitled "Sex and the Sons of the South." Lewd exploits of Newcomb coeds were alluded to at length, and the University was portrayed as a sexual haven for "southern gentlemen." Most people affiliated with the Tulane community found this pretty amusing, but some students are still frantically searching for the promiscuity they read about.

Our arrival on campus is not completely pleasant. Overcrowded housing has forced many A&S students to triple up in already small doubles, and transfer women have been placed in Dominican College dorms. Even the U.C. quad cannot provide escape, as it has been closed for reseeding. Our spirits remain undaunted though, and early semester partying is truly underway. The Boot and Tin Lizzie's are quickly reestablished as the campus hangouts, and Greek parties provide more entertainment. Sleep is of little importance.

Tanned and healthy-looking from the summer, we walk to class barefoot, carrying around books and notebooks not yet marred by the effects of an "all-nighter." WTUL blasts from dorm room speakers. Dogs, ignoring the "keep off" sign, lay on the quad in the sun, and we all look towards the new semester with anticipation.

S E P T E M B E R

Crime continues to be a major problem in the uptown area and early in the month, an L.S.U. student is raped outside the Delta Tau Delta house. An assailant dubbed "The Kissing Bandit" accosts several Newcomb students and other uptown females, forcing them to kiss him, and then fleeing. Tulane security, taking all conceivable steps to protect the students, institutes a shuttle bus service for those who would otherwise have to walk alone at night. Additionally, Tulane increases the campus police force, initiates Operation Student Alert, and improves campus lighting. On campus, at least, students can generally feel safe.

The administration is also experiencing some turmoil. Keith Rush of WSMB radio accuses President F. Sheldon Hackney of dismissing nineteen members of the faculty because they signed an anti-athletic petition. Hackney categorically denied these allegations, but Rush refuses to rescind his statements. The Board of Administrators present Hackney with another setback in the form of a "no confidence" vote in Vice-President of Development Gary Bayer. Bayer, one of Hackney's early appointees is forced to resign, against the wishes of the President. Students and faculty alike speculate as to who is really in charge of Tulane's affairs.

Eric Olas

The Tulane football season starts off surprisingly well. Most of the fans attending the opening game against Stanford do not really expect the Green Wave to win, nor are they terribly concerned about the outcome anyway. However, in the second quarter, when Tulane pulls ahead 12-10, the crowd looks interested. The Wave's 33-10 win has students, faculty and alumni cheering wildly in a standing ovation at the end of the game. The possibility of a winning season no longer seems like a hopelessly remote fantasy. However, the loss to Rice the next week fortifies the skeptics' belief that the Stanford win was merely a fluke. The fans know better though, and the month ends with the Wave standing at 3-1. The campus is abundant with newly discovered football fans.

The Green Wave is not the only strong force this month. Hurricane Frederic threatens to sweep through New Orleans, resulting in the evacuation of Alumnae Hall and incredibly long lines in the supermarkets. Fortunately, all precautions proved unnecessary, as the storm passes to the east, hitting New Orleans with only winds and rain. It enlivens a Wednesday night though, and the movie on campus is appropriately entitled "Frenzy."

Bruff food continues to attract derision and repel students. A contract student pushes a "dead man" in a wheelchair carrying a sign that reads "Bruff kills" into the Bruff dining room. Their small demonstration is greeted by cheers from other students, but ARA officials react by confiscating their meal cards, probably a blessing in disguise. The Associated Student Body has organized a committee to the ARA program, but students remain dissatisfied with campus food service.

“Wave Craze” is the prevailing spirit on campus as the Tulane football team continues to win, both at home and on the road. Excitement increases with the announcement that the homecoming game against Ole Miss will be televised. The Queen of the festivities, Debbie Cunningham, is elected along with the court, and homecoming preparations are underway. A large bonfire is planned to spark spirits in the stadium parking lot.

Tulane is fortunate to have the opportunity to host soviet dissident Alexander Ginzberg. Speaking through a translator, Ginzberg emphasizes the complete absence of human rights in the Soviet Union. The audience listens in fascinated horror to a detailed account of a country where no freedom of religion, press, speech or education exists. Ginzberg, with much insight, warns that it is not the people of the Soviet Union who are to be feared. Rather, our concern should be about a regime which takes away all the dignity and rights of human beings.

Other campus organizations are active this month too. CACTUS, after a long, hard search, has finally selected Joseph B. Gordon as their new executive director. The Tulane University Theater begins its season with a production of Anton Chekhov's Uncle Vanya, and John Poche is elected as WTUL's new general manager. The ASB is not idle either, as they have been debating the issue of an extended Thanksgiving break.

Most noteworthy of all is the acclaim that the Tulane Hullabaloo has earned. Earlier in the month, the Associated Collegiate Press awarded the paper the highest honor rating, that of All-American. The Hullabaloo later receives the Pace-maker award, distinguishing it as the finest college weekly in the country.

NOVEMBER

November can only be called football month at Tulane. Plans for the demolition of Tulane Stadium have been finalized, and the Administration holds a farewell party. Football players, cheerleaders, and fans who had made, or watched, football history there, gather to bid the stadium farewell. They were joined by students who admire the stadium and the memory of its former glory. Now, however, the stadium is not the only reminder of Green Wave fame. Students are possessed by an almost fanatical "Wave Craze" that has rekindled spirit at Tulane.

Homecoming celebrations begin with a bonfire as fans burn an Ole Miss Rebel in effigy. Spirits and enthusiasm rise, as each speaker thanks the cheering crowd for their support. Superfest, a wet, muddy, and thoroughly enjoyable party on the quad follows the next day as we all await Saturday's big game.

The victory over Ole Miss is perfect. It is the first televised game of the season, as the crowd is well aware and the Green Wave is at its best. Even the Associated Press takes notice, and finally votes Tulane into their top twenty.

An invitation to the Liberty Bowl in Memphis is tremendously satisfying, but not even a choice bowl bid can equal the excitement over the L.S.U. game. The traditional rivalry is supercharged this year as Tulane enters the dome with a better record than L.S.U. Despite warnings from Baton Rouge that the Green Wave is sure "Tiger Bait," the campus feeling is that a win is certainly possible. Even President Hackney wears an "L.S. Who?" t-shirt, and buttons, shirts, and banners all over campus tell L.S.U. exactly where to go. To add to the excitement, the contest receives last minute television coverage. The game sells out the Superdome, and one banner typifies the feeling of Wave fans: "Give me Liberty, but first give me L.S.U."

The final score is a Wave roll over the Tigers, 24-13. This is only the second win over L.S.U. since 1948, and Tulane students couldn't have asked for more. With tails between their legs, the Tigers retreat to the lockers as a sea of green and blue pours out onto the field.

Eric Olas

Student demonstrations at Tulane have been a pretty rare occurrence in the past decade. However, the Iranian hostage crisis, and the corresponding feelings of anger prompt students to take some sort of action. A mild protest is staged, and although it is small and peaceful, it shows that at least some students are aware and concerned. The demonstration is conducted in New Orleans' style as Tulane students carry signs bearing slogans such as, "Ayatollah is a Yat" and, "Go to Iran, L.S.U."

Not all is grim on Tulane campus, though. The Royal Lichtenstein Circus makes a spectacular appearance one Wednesday afternoon, amazing and delighting onlookers. Even those who are "too old for that sort of thing" cannot resist, and a few even walk away carrying a balloon.

Papa John Creach also makes a grand appearance, courtesy of the TUCP concert committee. His lively fiddle music is surpassed only by his facial expressions as he dances. The night is musical entertainment at its best.

DECEMBER

The administration and faculty have several conflicts over salaries and the tenure problem during the month. Once again, President Hackney's authority is questioned. The problems however, are quickly and quietly settled. Difficulties with tenure appointments are resolved, as the tenure committee finally determines that the President is correct.

Political campaigning in New Orleans climaxes this month with the election of Dave Treen as governor. In keeping with the New Orleans tradition, the elections are less than totally honest, and many of the campaigns are little more than mud-slinging sessions. The new officials, however, seem to be refreshingly free from the usual corruption.

The quiet singing of birds and the tolling of Loyola's bells each morning have been replaced by the sounds of blasting and jackhammers as the stadium demolition gets underway. The piles of debris on what was once the football field serve as a sad reminder of the demise of a magnificent stadium.

The Dixie Dregs come to campus, giving an excellent performance of jazz-rock music. The concert, a last chance to party before the end of the semester, is a very enjoyable experience. It is the perfect culmination of a very active semester for T.U.C.P.

New Orleans has begun to prepare for the holiday season. Mr. Bimble, the best loved snowman aside from Frosty, has made his perennial appearance atop Maison Blanche, overlooking Canal Street. Store window displays have been elaborately designed as merchants prepare themselves for the season rush. New Orleans is not exactly a "winter wonderland," but that hasn't stifled the growing holiday spirit.

On campus, very little merry making goes on while classes end and finals begin. Rather, dashing to the library, drinking gallons of coffee, and making last minute efforts to read five books in four hours have become prevalent activities. Finally, it's over, and exhausted, we embark on vacation, swearing to not even think about another book until next semester.

As we return to Tulane at the start of a new decade, speculation on the future is rich in political overtones. The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and President Carter's proposal to reinstate draft registration has caused a lot of concern. Marriage, graduate school, and emigration to Canada are discussed as possible ways to avoid the draft. Some students however, infuriated over the continuing hostage crisis in Iran, feel that it is time for America to exert its military power. Tensions are high as Carter threatens a U.S. boycott of the summer Olympics in Moscow if the Soviets do not retreat.

On the campus however, the turmoil of the real world seems somewhat remote, and life goes on as usual. Basketball season is underway, and amidst general mediocrity, the fans in the Freret street gym see occasional flashes of brilliance, foreshadowing future development. The usually excellent Tulane Sailing Team again proves itself by placing first in the Sugar Bowl Regatta. Tulane La Crosse, too, looks forward to another outstanding season.

Campus debate over the Tenure issue continues as the Senate ratifies the special report presented to it by the Committee on Faculty Freedom, Tenure, and Responsibility. It is the committee's contention that President Hackney is assuming too much power by vetoing already approved tenures, and that it is inequitable to the faculty to change standards for those already seeking tenure.

Colonel William Berridge, chief of Tulane Police, announces his decision to retire at the end of the semester. Since coming to Tulane in 1975, he has built a concerned, professional security force that has reduced many types of crime on campus. His presence will be missed.

A special Students Admissions Committee has been formed to aid in the recruiting of applicants to Tulane as the school seeks to improve its student body. Other students are involved in a heated debate over the presentation by TUCP of the historically important but blatantly racist film, "Birth of a Nation." ACT and BALSAs organize a demonstration against the showing of the film in McAlister Auditorium. The movie is a historical comment on life during Reconstruction, but has become a symbolic statement for the Ku Klux Klan. The film is shown despite a boycott by ACT and BALSAs, but these organizations do succeed in making students aware of the intents of the movie.

Karla Bonoff, along with guest Brock Walsh, appears in McAlister Auditorium before a highly enthusiastic audience. The concert is superb, as she proves once again that she is a polished professional but still an honestly emotional vocalist.

FEBRUARY

entertaining Mardi Gras warm-up. Campus Nite presents their annual show, which is "Guys and Dolls" this year. The Tulane Sailing Team wins the Windjammer Regatta, braving terrible weather to defeat their able competition. George Plimpton, a journalist who believes that one must experience a story rather than just research and write it, comes to Tulane under the auspices of the Lyceum Committee. He relates some of his adventures to a small but fascinated audience, rounding out a month of busy activity on campus.

The climbing spirit of Mardi Gras is suddenly damped by the death of Henry Roeland Byrd, better known as Professor Longhair. People who have come to associate the lively spirit that abounds at "Tipitina's" with the loose and wild piano music of the "Fess" will greatly miss this superb performer. He was more than a musician, he was a legend; the king of New Orleans jazz, rhythm, and blues. His jazz funeral ushers him out with a flourish, and simultaneously ushers in the Mardi Gras season. Doubtless, he would have wanted it that way.

February brings still more changes in the Administration as Vice-President for Finance Larry Peterson announces that he is resigning at the end of the semester. This is apparently the result of a decision to combine the post with that of Vice-President for Business, a duty which Peterson does not care to handle. The search for a successor has not yet begun. Colonel Berridge has withdrawn his resignation as Chief of Campus Police; a welcome surprise. A.R.A. experiences a shift in management, as Al Hommel assumes the position of General Manager. The usual promises of improvements in food service are reiterated, but only time — or perhaps our stomachs — will tell.

David Young is elected President of the ASB and will be aided by a staff comprised of Dave Schneider, Chuck Silverman, Bill Donius and Ted Jones. The President of the A&S Senate, Taylor Bryant, organizes a faculty — student picnic. The combination of Popeye's Chicken and beer leads to just the right atmosphere for fraternizing between students and professors. The Architecture School hosts their annual Beaux Arts Ball, an outlandishly

Mardi Gras season is officially here, and the entire population of the city devotes itself to the frantic pursuit of pleasure. The partying that was dampened by the police strike last year is amply compensated for. The city swells to four times its original size as tourists swarm in in hordes to experience the renowned Carnival. We "natives" laugh at their inexperience as we expertly navigate around the Quarter, finding secret parking spaces and local hangouts. Finally, it is Fat Tuesday, and the city literally explodes with music, parades, beads, and doubloons. The crowd unites in a drunken frenzy, linked by the common desire to have a good time. Costumes and painted faces provide the anonymity necessary to truly go wild, and New Orleans proves once again that it is indeed the city that care forgot.

This month, we get a chance to express our frustrations to the administration at "Bitch Night". President Hackney and the various heads of ARA, Student Services, ASB, and the Health Center are bombarded with questions and complaints. No startling issues are brought up, and no new solutions are revealed, but everyone feels better after being given the opportunity to "bitch" to the right people.

Administrative upheaval continues as the popular Associate Dean of Students, Terry Jones, accepts a new position as the Director of Tulane's Alumni Fund. Fred Southerland resigns his deanship in the School of Social Work. After seven hard years, Southerland apparently feels that it is time to move on. Wayne Woody is named the permanent dean of University College after having served as acting dean there for two years. Steve Jennings, Associate Dean of Students for Residential Life and Advising, announces that he will leave Tulane to accept a position as Vice-President of Student Services at Furman University.

Lauren Sussman

“Direction”, Tulane’s annual speakers symposium’, always brings fascinating personalities to campus, and this year is no exception. Such notables as John Ehrlichman, George Gallup, Nora Ephron, and Dr. Spock, among many others, present their views on Government, Working, Education and Lifestyles. As always, many differing opinions are expressed, sometimes in less than friendly terms. The four nights of panelists offer much insight into the theme “American Society: Crisis of Change”. No one is really sure where we are going or what to do about it, but everyone certainly seems to have a lot to say about it.

Last year, a group of Tulane students, dissatisfied with some aspects of the Hullabaloo, obtained funds to start a second paper. According to a recent poll of students, however, only 27% of the response rated the Torch as excellent or good, while 84% felt that the Hullabaloo is worthy of such ratings. The Media Board has decided to merge the two papers into a biweekly publication but the Senate is withholding action until a further study can be made.

The month is concluded with a three day musical extravaganza at the WTUL Rock On Survival Marathon. The rain does not prevent the Tulane community from jamming in the Kendall Cram Room to hear such greats as Lil’ Queenie, The Cartoons, James Rivers, NRBQ, The Radiators, and the Nevilles. In case that isn’t enough music, Bonnie Raitt performs to an ecstatic audience in McAlister Auditorium Sunday night. The weekend is definitely “wet and wild”.

Tulane receives national attention once again as biology professor Clayton R. Page III is indicted by a Federal Grand Jury on twelve counts of fraud. Page allegedly has been using research grants to pay relatives for work never done, and for his personal interests. The outrage against Page is further intensified by the fact that he used his professional reputation and his connection with the University to obtain the funds. Procedures for a just-cause dismissal of a tenured faculty member are underway.

The Tulane football team is ready to roll over next year's opponents, but not under the direction of Larry Smith. Coach Smith, in a surprise announcement, informs the Tulane community that he will be coaching at the University of Arizona next year. Apparently, the decision was a financial one, but it leaves many fans to question the loyalty of the coach to his team.

Elsewhere in sports, winning seems to be the rule for Tulane teams. The Sailing Team wins the South Eastern Intercollegiate Sailing Association Qualifying Regatta, and will compete further in June. They are already ranked third in the nation. Both the men's and women's tennis teams are having winning seasons with records of 11-6 and 11-5 respectively. Lacrosse, always a solid team, now holds a seven win two loss record. The Green Wave Baseball team is also having another fine season. With a 23-7 record they are ranked twenty-first in the nation. The quads are constantly in use as softball, Rugby, and Ultimate frisbee games compete for equal time. Everyone on campus seems to be actively involved in one sport or another.

April is festival time in New Orleans. Newcomb has its Spring Fest and exhibits the talent of its students. Julian Bond, a leading Civil Rights Activist, comes to Tulane and speaks about black rights. His sarcastic humor is quite effective and the audience leaves inspired. Rain postpones the Strawberry Festival, but it is held the next weekend and is deliciously successful.

The New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival is a superb mixture of crafts, food and music. The mud doesn't keep anyone away from the fairgrounds, and it seems that all the Jazz greats are there. "Go for it!" is the slogan of the two weekend event, and that's exactly what the musicians do. Stage four is dedicated to the memory of Professor Longhair, and each artist to perform there seems intent on paying tribute to that memorial. Jambalaya, gumbo, and beer mix with Jazz, Rhythm and Blues to form the essence of New Orleans. As B.B. King says to his cheering crowd, "Now I know why jazz was born here." The music goes on during the week in the theatres and aboard the riverboats. It lingers at the Dew Drop Inn, and slowly fades, only to explode at Tipitina's or on Bourbon Street, or anywhere anyone can put together a piano, a couple of horns, and a few people with "rhythm in their souls."

Eric Olaves

Finals end at last, and most undergraduates depart home to await grades, and enjoy the summer. Seniors, however, are now without the pressure of exams and are free to enjoy senior week. For the adventurous, there is a tubing trip down the Tangipahoa, roller skating in Audubon Park, and a Beach Party at the Civic. There is a reception given by President Hackney, and another at Alumni House. There is a night at "Nick's", one at "Pat O'Brien's" and free beer at "Tin Lizzies". Finally, it's Thursday, and there is crayfish and Dixie on the quad to the excellent rock and roll of "Sunshiny Daze". For those who can still stand, there is a party on the President, followed by partying at all the favorite local hangouts. Senior Week is time to enjoy it all one last time before going out into the cold, cruel world where some bars actually close before six in the morning.

TULANE
UNIVERSITY

Graduations are held, speeches made, degrees conferred, honors bestowed. The Class of 1980 leaves Tulane with the preparation necessary for graduate schools or careers as architects, engineers, businessmen, doctors, and lawyers. The ones who made it with highest honors, and the ones who barely made it at all, join together to reflect upon their time at Tulane. Friends say goodbye, and classes, exams, and professors are left behind to the undergraduates. The memories will remain with the seniors though, and next year's class must create its own. We are looking forward to it.

Stadium Farewell

Tulane Stadium has fallen into grave disrepair during the last five years, and the administration has started to tear down the 53 year old brick and steel structure. The first plans for the demolition came in 1978, as a part of the Sasaki plan for University development.

Although it was seldom used for sporting events after the construction of the Superdome, it was used for Intramural activities, and high school football games that were played every Saturday night. However, when Jordan Enterprises brought its cranes and blow torches to Willow Street, the fun ended.

Now, the Sugar Bowl is a pile of twisted beams, broken bricks, and many memories. 6401 Willow will be missed by one and all.

Once one of the finest college facilities in the nation, Tulane Stadium was the world's largest steel stadium, with a seating capacity of over 80,000.

Before this year's demolition, the sports fans of New Orleans had the chance to view historic events, such as Tom Dempsey's world record field goal of 63 yards, and Tulane's 14-0 victory over LSU in 1973. In addition, the stadium was the home of the Sugar Bowl Classic, which was played every New Year's day from its inception in 1935, until it moved to the Superdome in 1975.

From high school to professional football, concerts to its own funeral, Tulane Stadium was the home of New Orleans entertainment.

With a roof 680 feet in diameter and 27 stories high, the Superdome has been the home of Green Wave football since 1975. The Dome also houses the New Orleans Saints, and recently a baseball series between the Baltimore Orioles and the New York Yankees, for the benefit of Tulane athletics.

Over 80,000 people attended the two game series, a new record for baseball in Louisiana. Another attendance record was set, when 75,000 people saw Tulane defeat LSU. This was a record for people watching a college football game in the Dome. The Superdome: a place where sports fans can watch their team play, without getting rained on.

New Era Begins With Shocking Upset

The 1979 football season was a crossroad as far as Tulane athletics was concerned. During recent seasons, poor student support and lack of attendance, as well as pressure from the faculty to drop football, showed a dissatisfaction with Tulane athletics in general.

The school had been plagued by poor teams in the past, with Coach Larry Smith's football teams only winning nine games in the last three years. People were beginning to doubt his ability to produce a winner, but athletic director Hindman Wall had faith in Coach Smith.

The first indication that this would not be just another losing season came in the opener against Stanford. Pre-season polls ranked the Cardinals 13th in the nation, and this game was touted as the beginning of a "new era" in Tulane athletics. The Wave proved that it was capable of playing quality football by trouncing Stanford, 33-10, in the Superdome before 41,000 fans.

Both offensively and defensively, the Greenies executed to perfection. The decisive play came early in the second quarter, with Stanford leading, 10-7. Following a 44-yard punt to the Cardinal one by Roch Hontas, defensive linemen Wilfred Simon and Kevin Cole sacked Cardinal quarterback Turk Schonert in the endzone for a safety. This play set up a field goal by Ed Murray to give the Wave a 12-10 lead which lasted until halftime.

In the second half, Tulane's defense completely shut down the Cardinal attack, allowing only four first downs and six yards rushing overall. The Wave offense moved at will, led by the quarterbacking of Roch Hontas.

Hontas was a one-man wrecking crew on this particular night, carrying the ball 19 times for 75 yards and one touchdown, and completing 14 of 27 passes for 139 yards and two more scores.

Many die-hard Tulane supporters were surprised and pleased at the way the Wave handled the Cardinals. People were already talking Top Twenty and bowl games after only one outing. But there were still a few lessons the Wave had to learn before becoming a consistent winning team.

A Lesson Learned Hapless Owls Win

Rice	21
Tulane	17

The Wave learned one of these lessons the following week — courtesy of the Rice Owls. After taking a 14-7 lead at halftime, the Wave came out flat in the second half. An Ed Murray field goal made the score 17-7, before Owl quarterback Randy Hertel opened fire.

By the time the smoke had cleared, Hertel had completed 24 of 36 passes, and given Rice a 21-17 lead. The Wave had a chance to come back and win, but Hontas' pass into the end zone in the closing seconds was intercepted.

The Rice victory was the Owls' only win of the season, and it left the Green Wave fans stunned. The spirit and enthusiasm of a week ago was now clouded with doubt, wondering if the win over Stanford had been a fluke. The Wave's 1-1 record, which would have been accepted two weeks ago, was now considered mediocre.

However, the defeat would not turn out to be a total loss for Tulane. The team had learned that they could not afford to take any opponent lightly. This lesson would prove beneficial to the Wave during the course of the season.

Greenies Capture Sweet Revenge

Tulane returned to Texas the following week, looking for revenge and a chance to regain their winning form. A year ago, the Wave suffered a humiliating 13-7 Homecoming defeat at the hands of the Texas Christian University Horned Frogs, a team that had won only four games in the past four years.

The Wave trailed 9-0 early, and it looked as if Tulane was continuing its lackluster performance of a week ago. Finally, Hontas got the offense clicking on a long drive. With Marvin Christian and Reggie Reginelli leading the way, the Greenies scored two second quarter touchdowns to trim the Frogs' lead to one, 16-15.

In the second half, TCU could not stop Tulane as the Wave rolled to a 33-19 win.

Marvin Christian turned in his finest effort of the season, and it seemed like Tulane might be turning things around. What many people didn't realize was just how much this victory would mean for the Wave.

Mad Dog Tramples; Tulane Triumphs

With the second win of the season under their belt, the Green Wave played host to the undefeated and 20th ranked SMU Mustangs (3-0).

During this game the Wave found a new hero: Reggie Reginelli, who carried nine times for 88 yards, caught five passes for 43 more yards, and had a key 51-yard punt return in the fourth quarter. Marvin Christian had his second good outing, gaining 107 yards and scoring two touchdowns, including the winner from 19 yards out.

Tulane dominated the first half, roaring to a 17-7 halftime lead. They then recovered an SMU fumble following the kickoff, and found themselves in a position to ice the game with another score.

But SMU's defense held, Ed Murray's field goal attempt was aborted by a bad snap, and the Mustangs charged back to tie the score at 17-17, before Christian's run capped the victory.

As the closing seconds ticked off the clock, the Tulane players could be heard chanting, "Twenty!, Twenty!" They soon found out it was not that easy.

Hontas Masters Easy Fourth Win

Tulane 42
Vanderbilt 14

The Green Wave matched their win total of a year ago, in their game against Vanderbilt, trouncing the hapless Commodores, 42-14. This victory marked the first time that a Smith-coached Tulane team had won three straight games, and raised the Greenies' mark to 4-1.

Tulane jumped to a 21-0 halftime lead on the passing of Roch Hontas and the receiving of Alton Alexis. Alexis broke the Tulane career record for most pass receptions, with the record-setter coming on a first quarter nine-yard touchdown pass.

Hontas had another excellent game, hitting on 18 of 24 passes for 259 yards and three touchdowns. Hontas was also named the Associated Press Southeastern Back of the Week for the second time in five games.

Tulane would now take their 4-1 record on the road for the next two weeks, hoping to impress the pollsters and earn a place in the Top Twenty.

Eagles Fall Short As Wave Rolls On

Tulane
So. Miss

Late in the second quarter in Hattiesburg, it looked as though Tulane's three game winning streak was in jeopardy. The Golden Eagles of Southern Mississippi had jumped to a 13-0 lead over the Wave and seemed to be in complete control.

However, this year's Tulane team would not collapse as its predecessors had done in seasons past. Led by the offensive mastermind, Roch Hontas, the offense rallied to the challenge.

Hontas connected on touchdown passes in the second and third quarter, with Ed Murray converting the all-important PAT's, to give Tulane a 14-13 fourth quarter lead.

But the 3-2 Eagles were no pushovers either. Quarterback Dane McDaniel led Southern Mississippi back, taking his team on a long drive, for a 19-14 lead with less than three minutes left in the game.

The Wave rebounded as Hontas cranked up a desperation drive. It was capped by his record-breaking twelfth touchdown pass of the season, to freshmen receiver Robert Moses, giving Tulane a 20-19 lead with a scant 30 seconds remaining.

On the ensuing kickoff, the Golden Eagle receiver lateraled to a teammate near the sidelines, who raced all the way to the Tulane 10.

The play was nullified by a penalty, and the Eagles missed a 41-yard field goal as time ran out.

Bowl Bid Stalled By Mountaineers

Students and fans alike scanned the papers Tuesday morning, hoping to find that their 5-1 Tulane team had broken into the Top Twenty. They were disappointed once again — the Wave was not included in the rankings.

Tulane traveled to little Morgantown, West Virginia on Saturday, looking to make it five in a row, and clinch their first winning season since 1973. The Mountaineers (3-4) entered the game on a three game winning streak of their own.

The game started off as most of the Wave's games this season had, with Tulane falling behind 10-0 in the first quarter. The offense came alive in the second quarter, and the teams were tied 17-17 at half.

But this just was not the Wave's day. The weather was perfect, the field was perfect and on this day, the Mountaineers were perfect. The Wave defense couldn't stop the Mountaineers' young backfield, and West Virginia gained an impressive 377 yards rushing.

West Virginia turned a couple of Wave turnovers and a long touchdown pass into a 22-17 victory, giving the Wave their second loss of the season.

Defense Rebounds In Crucial Win

The Tulane defense rebounded against the Yellow-jackets, attempting to make amends for a poor showing the previous week. They attacked with vengeance, keeping Georgia Tech off the scoreboard until the final period, and winning 12-7.

This victory secured the Wave's winning season, upping their record to a fine 6-2.

In addition to the excellent defensive performance, the offense was sparked by the play of junior running back Terry Harris. Harris gained 109 yards, including a 40-yard run to the Tech three in the third quarter. Tulane scored on the next play to take a 12-0 lead.

Tulane hoped that this win was the start toward the final stretch run, as fans and team alike began looking forward to a possible bowl bid.

Tulane Drowns BC With Aerial Attack

For the first time in a number of years, Tulane was faced with adverse weather conditions. It had been raining steadily in Boston since Friday, where the Wave was preparing to play the Boston College Eagles.

Still, wide receiver Darrel Griffin and the rest of the offense seemed to have no problem with the cold, miserable weather, as Tulane blasted the Eagles, 43-8.

Tulane started early this time, scoring field goals on their first two possessions by capitalizing on numerous Eagle turnovers. A touchdown made the score 12-0 Tulane after the first quarter.

Then the aerial fireworks began, with Hontas completing three touchdown passes to give the Wave a 33-0 stranglehold over Boston College.

After upping the score to 40-0, the Eagles finally got on the scoreboard in the fourth quarter, ending with a score of 43-8.

With a 7-2 record and an impressive offensive display, Tulane seemed a sure bet to make the Top Twenty. However, once again they were passed up by the pollsters.

So the Wave looked to their next game, the Homecoming encounter with the Ole Miss Rebels, to place Tulane in the rankings.

Success AT Last: Wave Breaks Into Top 20 With Rout

After ten weeks of working, the Tulane Green Wave finally got their long awaited recognition. On regional television, the Greenies decimated the Ole Miss Rebels, 49-15, leaving no doubt that the Wave was a powerhouse to be reckoned with.

Tulane spotted the Rebels a 3-0 lead, before the offense exploded. Touchdown runs by Marvin Christian (20 yards), Reggie Reginelli (22 yards), and Terry Harris (61 yards) gave Tulane a 21-3 lead at intermission.

The Wave continued their onslaught after halftime. Hon-tas passed to Alton Alexis for a 24-yard score, and Christian took one in from 33 yards out, to give the Wave a 35-3 margin after three stanzas.

Junior Nickie Hall entered and led the Wave to another score, making it 42-3. The defense played excellently throughout, with the Rebels scoring only after the substitutes entered the field. The defense held the rebels to only 55 yards rushing in the game.

The game was a homecoming of sorts for Ole Miss quarterback John Fourcade. Fourcade, who graduated from New Orleans' Shaw High School, was harrassed throughout the game, being sacked numerous times and being intercepted twice.

This exceptional effort proved not to be in vain when the time came for the Top Twenty to be released. The Associated Press chose the Wave as the 20th ranked team in the nation, tying them with Baylor.

With an 8-2 record, and having scored 92 points in their last two games, the Wave was ready and waiting for their annual clash with arch rival LSU.

Wave Tames Tigers

The Green Wave capped off their regular season with a regionally televised 24-13 victory over arch-rival LSU. The win boosted the Wave's record to 9-2, the best since 1973, when they last beat LSU, by a score of 14-0.

When the crowd of 73,496 entered the Superdome, they expected to see an exciting game from the two highly ranked teams. No one expected the Green Wave to dominate for most of the game.

The "Mean Green" defense started the first drive for the Wave, as defensive tackle Kevin Cole forced and recovered an LSU fumble at the Tiger 27. Quarterback Roch Hontas threw a series of short passes to Marcus Anderson and Alton Alexis, only to be stopped on the LSU 2 yard line. Reliable Ed Murray booted a 19 yard field goal to give the Greenies a 3-0 lead.

On the ensuing series, Tulane showed that they were capable of taking command of the game. After a 12 yard punt return by Reggie Reginelli, Jeff Jones broke six Tiger tackles on an impressive 18-yard run. After two short passes to Rodney Holman, the Wave was knocking at the door on the LSU 13. The score came when Hontas hit Terry Harris in the flat, and Harris scampered into the end zone, making the score Tulane 10, LSU 0.

With long awaited revenge in their sights, Hontas and Reginelli headed a 67 yard drive for the next Wave score. With inches to go for a first down, Reginelli shook off a tackle and burst 18 yards to the LSU 26. A 16 yard pass from Hontas to Reginelli brought the ball to the LSU 6 yard line. After a delay of game penalty, Hontas threw a 13-yard touchdown pass to Marcus Anderson.

An interception by Marty Wetzel set up Tulane's final score. A pass interference call on LSU brought the ball to the Tiger 17, where Alton Alexis beat man-to-man coverage for the touchdown, giving the Greenies a 24-0 lead at halftime.

The third quarter was filled with missed scoring opportunities. A 34-yard field goal was aborted by a bad snap, and Hontas threw a pass that was intercepted on the LSU 10 yard line. But the heroic defense still held the high-powered Tiger offense scoreless.

When the fourth quarter started, LSU launched their final comeback attempt. After two touchdowns had cut the lead to 24-13, the Tigers seemed to be on another scoring drive. On fourth and ten from the Tulane 10, Tom Cheviot sacked Tiger quarterback Steve Ensminger, ending LSU's final hopes.

After beating LSU only once in 32 years, the taste of victory was sweet. Not only did the Green Wave finish the regular season as the 15th ranked team in the nation, but they had the "braggin rights" as the best football team in the state of Louisiana, and a chance to move higher to the Liberty Bowl.

The 15th ranked Green Wave entered their first bowl game in six years with high expectations and hopes of making Tulane football known around the nation. The Penn State Nittany Lions, a perennial bowl participant, were to be the Wave's opposition.

The Tulane team was placed in a disadvantageous position from the outset against the stronger Lions. The field was saturated from the heavy rains that had been falling throughout the weekend. This was not to the advantage of Tulane's finesse-oriented offense.

After a scoreless first quarter, the Penn State offense began to drive on the Tulane defense. However, the scrappy Wave defenders did not give in, holding the Lions to only two field goals in the first half.

Trailing 6-0 at the half, Tulane responded with a three-pointer of their own from Ed Murray closing to within three. With less than four minutes remaining, the Wave began their final drive.

Three completions for first downs by Roch Hontas moved Tulane to the Penn State eight yard line. The Greenies were unable to push it across for a touchdown, and had to settle for a tying field goal with less than a minute left.

The Nittany Lions then turned a sure tie into a Green Wave defeat on a single play. A 39-yard completion on a halfback pass broke the Wave's secondary, setting up Penn State for the winning field goal and a 9-6 victory.

Although the Wave failed to capture their second Liberty Bowl trophy, their performance left no doubt that Tulane football was for real, and that Tulane fans will have something to look forward to in 1980.

BASKETBALL

For Tulane Basketball, 1979-80 was to be a season of false hopes. Promises of an improved team were dealt a severe blow early in the season, when senior center Bobby Jones was lost for the season with a knee injury.

Early season performances indicated that a winning team was just around the corner. A one-point loss to 8th-ranked LSU showed that Tulane was capable of playing excellent basketball.

Much of the reason for the poor record was that Tulane was playing a much tougher schedule than ever before. In addition to playing LSU twice, the Wave's schedule included the likes of post-season tournament participants Michigan, Notre Dame, Florida State, Louisville, and Virginia Tech with the last three facing Tulane twice in the course of the season. From these six teams came ten of the Green Wave's seventeen losses of the season.

Although there was little improvement in terms of wins and losses (10-17 as compared to last year's 8-19), there was marked progress in the caliber of basketball displayed by the team. Many of the losses could have gone either way, such as close contests that went to Louisville (64-60), Virginia Tech (69-68), LSU (80-79) and Michigan (72-71).

In addition to the loss of Jones, the Green Wave was forced to compete without the services of senior Carlos Zuniga, due to academic reasons. This left only one senior Gary Lorio, to provide experience and leadership.

The needed leadership and promise for the future was to come, however not from one of the older experienced players on the team, but from a freshman, 6'6" forward Paul Thompson from Alexandria.

Thompson, a reserve in the early stages of the season earned himself a place in the starting lineup when Jones was injured, and proceeded to lead the team in scoring and rebounding.

From his performance Thompson was named Freshman of the Year in the Metro Conference and landed a place on the second team of the Freshman All-American Squad.

Sophomore Joe Holston provided scoring and playmaking from guard position where he was teamed with defensive specialist Reggie MacLaurin. Sophomore Micah Blunt was moved to forward from center late in the season and performed credibly after suffering through a poor second year. Junior Eric Dozier moved to the pivot position late in the season and held his own against the much taller centers of the conference.

With the loss of only one senior, the Tulane basketball team should be in a position to make it over the top and become a winning team next year.

Women's Basketball

Despite a harder schedule, and a young inexperienced team, Karen Womack coached her women's basketball team to a 16-11 season.

The obvious high point of the season was the surprise third place finish in the First Women's Metro Basketball Tournament. However, their luck was not so good in the L.A.I.A.W. tournament, with the women suffering a 75-52 defeat at the hands of McNeese State, ending the season.

Sophomore Terry Johnson had a spectacular year, scoring 548 points at a 10.2 points per game clip. From the field she hit 51% of her shots, while shooting 69% from the foul line. Johnson finished the regular season fifth in scoring, and fourth in rebounding, with 248 in the state. She now has 889 career points.

Junior Patricia "O.J." Toujouse made a significant improvement from last year's 9.16 points per game to 12 points per game. Aside from being the second leading scorer on the team, O.J. broke the all-time record for the most points in one game, with an outstanding 58.

The only senior on the squad, Barbara Klingman, used her experience to help balance the eight other freshmen and sophomores, playing smart basketball at both ends of the court. Klingman was the first player recruited by Womack, and the first woman to receive an athletic scholarship.

Although the team played an extremely hard schedule, playing teams such as South Alabama, Alabama-Birmingham, Houston, Arkansas, and traditional rival LSU, the team improved, and matured as a whole. Tulane increased its shooting percentage to 44% from the floor and 65.7% from the foul line. Team rebounding increased from 34 to 37 per game.

Tulane finished the regular season state-wide fifth in scoring, fourth in team defense and field goal percentage, and third in win margin and record.

Swimming

The 1979-1980 swimming program began in September. Some forty individuals, under the supervision of coaches Peter Orschiedt and Ben Goslin, met at six a.m. in Tulane Stadium to run laps, to climb steps and to do vigorous calisthenics. In the beginning of November, morning workouts in the pool were substituted for practices in the Stadium, and the team was trimmed to 25 swimmers. A long season lay ahead of the young team, composed mostly of freshmen. The first meet was on November 10, the last in March.

The team did not perform well in the fall meets. More work was needed and Christmas training was the solution. While the rest of the University's population vacationed around the country, the team swam twice a day, seven days a week. The work paid off, as was shown by the team's upset victories over LSU and Houston, both ranked in the Top 20 in the country.

The Metro Championships in Blacksburg, Virginia culminated the season for the Green Wave swimmers. Five new school records were set, all by freshmen: Jerry Watson in the 200-yard backstroke, Jimmy Flowers in the 200-yard breaststroke, Wayne Viola in the 50-yard freestyle, and Kevin Switzer in the 200-yard and 500-yard freestyle. Climaxing a fine collegiate career, senior Randy Espenshied won the 100-yard freestyle, and was the meet's lone qualifier for the NCAA's.

Sailing

Saturday morning after a night out in the Quarter finds most college students sacked out in bed asleep, but there are no mornings after for a certain group of Tulanians. Every weekend at 8:00 a.m., bleary-eyed Tulane sailors gather in front of the UC to go out and battle the shifty winds and constantly changing conditions of Lake Ponchartrain in their search for a place in the best intercollegiate sailing teams.

The Tulane team, composed this year primarily of Sophomores, continued in the Tulane tradition of high quality in intercollegiate sailing competition, achieving a ranking among the top three teams in the nation. This was a remarkable feat for an entirely self-coached team in dire need of money and facing such teams as Navy, Tufts and King's Point. Tulane sailors consistently achieved high places in various team and single-handed regattas throughout the year.

Tulane played its first rugby match on a cold, windy Christmas Day in 1888. This was rugby's birth at Tulane. However, the game changed quickly into American football with the creation of the Southern Athletic Association in 1890. Rugby did not reappear on the Tulane campus until 1967 when a group of Medical students formed today's Tulane University Rugby Football Club. In the thirteen years the club has prospered under the leadership of many coaches and, since 1976, the fine administrative guidance of Dr. Rix Yard. The Tulane University Rugby team competes in many state, national and international rugby matches continuing the tradition of a sound mind in the sound, but sometimes intoxicated, body of the student athlete.

The Tulane Lacrosse Club had an enjoyable year enriching their reputation as the Powerhouse of the South Western Lacrosse Association.

Several important players from the previous year's club returned for the 1980 season. Kenny Cook, John Garcelon and Steve Janeck preserved the strength and ability at mid-field, while newcomers such as Joe Conroy and attacker George Kelley fortified other positions. Freshman Ben Gershowitz was a standout in the goalie circle.

Not only did the Wave stickers play admirably in the S.W.L.A., but they also chalked up wins against Houston, Texas Tech, and arch-rival LSU.

The Tulane Gymnastics Club, coached by Betsy Dyer, has been in existence since the early 70's. This year the gymnastics team has been quite busy. Added to their regular schedule was the University of Southeastern Louisiana. This increased the season to six meets.

The team easily won all the matches this season. Other activities included exhibitions to local schools. Some members of the team also taught faculty and children.

The Tulane Gymnastic Club can look forward to much more future success as long as the sport of gymnastics is on the rise and the team continues to have such talented students.

One special addition to this year's club was Lucy Elizabeth Dyer, born March 6, 1980. Being the daughter of the coach, she will be sure to become a fine gymnast and eventually be on the Tulane team.

Yearbook Turmoil Ends In Editor's Resignation

By IRA ROSENZWEIG
Managing Editor

Under pressure from the Media Board and his displeased yearbook staff, Jacob Frenkel has resigned as editor of the 1980 Jambalaya.

Frenkel presented his letter of resignation at Tuesday's meeting of the Media Board. At its previous meeting, the Board had requested that Frenkel quit as editor.

Citing Frenkel's frequent prolonged absences from campus, Board members questioned his ability to properly manage the yearbook's operations. Jambalaya staff members also were dissatisfied with Frenkel's leadership, an opinion expressed by the executive staff in a recent vote of no-confidence.

Frenkel eventually acquiesced to the Board's wishes, but related that he will continue to work "towards one end, the successful production and completion of the 1980 Jambalaya." He feels the "Media Board has an alternate end in mind as indicated by the desire to replace the individual who has pledged to achieve this end."

He would not, however, specify or elaborate what other purposes the Board might have in seeking his resignation.

Associate yearbook editor Bob Kottler was named temporary editor by Board Chairman Craig Glidden. Elections for a permanent editor will be held at the next Media Board meeting, February 26.

Kottler is Named Jambalaya Editor

Tulane Hullahaloo Staff Writer

A lengthy period of uncertainty and internal dissent within the 1980 staff was ended Tuesday with the confirmation by the Media Board of Bob Kottler as Jambalaya editor.

Kottler, a junior in the Business School, had been acting editor for the past three weeks since Jacob Frenkel, responding to his displeased staff and pressure from the Media Board, bowed out as editor-in-chief.

Frenkel, who was often away from campus this semester, was unable to manage the yearbook efficiently, the staff felt. The Media Board agreed, and called for Frenkel's resignation.

"We've had our problems," noted Kottler, "but things are finally coming together. We've already met our first deadline, and book sales are up."

"I have no doubt," he added, "that with a little work we will be able to deliver a top quality yearbook by Fall registration, just as we had originally planned.

New Academic VP Arrives Starr Examines Soviet Intentions

By BRAD KOPPEL
When S. Frederick Starr accepted the post of Tulane's 13th academic officer, the University was only one of the schools of President Ronald Reagan's "Tulane plan" for a new generation of leaders, and an important one. Starr, a distinguished scholar and an important member of the administration, is expected to bring with him a wealth of knowledge of the Soviet Union.

Tenure Committee Claims Hackney Ignored Request
At a recent meeting of the Tulane Board of Administration, President S. Frederick Starr reported to the board that the tenure system at Tulane is in danger of being dismantled at the national level. Starr said that the board of trustees of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) has passed a resolution that would require all universities to have a tenure committee that would be responsible for recommending faculty members for tenure.

Berridge Calls It Quits After Five Years
By CLARENCE BERRIDGE
Clarence Berridge, a Tulane professor since 1975, announced to President S. Frederick Starr that he would be resigning from his position as Tulane's director of the Center for the Study of the American South. Berridge said that he had spent five years at Tulane and that he was looking for a new challenge. Starr thanked Berridge for his contributions to the university and wished him well in his new endeavor.

WTUL

Dear Students,

Being that this is the first time (and most likely the last) that I'll be allowed to express myself in the public prints on anything, I would like to address first, WTUL; and second, non-commercial radio in general.

This was a very good year for WTUL. We made lots of money, bought lots of new equipment to play with, put a new tower up on top of Monroe, and made the Marathon one of the best parties in recent memory. In short, a rollicking good time was had by all.

As for non-commercial radio . . . More than likely, wherever you find yourself, you'll be able to tune in to a college-run station like 'TUL. Listen to it, support it, and tell your friends about it.

See you in the wild blue yonder.

Yours in mirth,
John Poché G.M.

Swim At Your own Risk

By Peter Schloss

Swimming pool. A status symbol used in the backyard playgrounds of the rich, semi-rich, and the middle class.

Swimming pool. A therapeutic recreational area frequented by old men and old ladies swimming laps diligently in New Orleans's sunshine.

Swimming pool. A massive overcrowded cement pond in a humid echoing room infiltrated by hoards of pre-adolescents and their parents searching for the ultimate blue ribbon in an AAU swim meet.

The above description is not unusual at the Tulane Swimming Pool. As of the moment, every available time slot is filled.

Although the Varsity Swimming team has ended as their use of the pool as of last week, numerous classes, organizations, and outside groups use the pool for various reasons. Recreational swimming, diving, and the Green Wave Club all fight each other for the strictly allotted, variable time.

The divers claim they don't have enough practice time for the boards, the recreational swimmers claim the divers get in their way, and the majority of the pool goes up in arms about what they feel is too much outside use of the pool.

Fran Lawrence, Deputy Provost, has just completed an ad hoc study of the pool situation which investigates the pool's physical conditions: its hours, and the alternatives to its problems. This study was ordered by President Sheldon Hackney after he had received numerous complaints about the availability of the pool to members of the Tulane community.

The results of Lawrence's study have not been released, and his recommendations have not yet been acted upon.

Lawrence said he has recommended to the President that a new chlorinator system be installed, a vacuum cleaner purchased, and weighing of the gross and cost of having outside groups use the pool be instituted.

Dr. Harvey Jansup from Tulane's Physical Education Department said "although I don't have the exact figures at hand, I don't believe the revenue we receive from these outside groups such as the Green Wave Club and the Seals Divers is that much."

Jansup explained that revenue was one of the reasons why these groups have been using the pool over the years.

President Hackney is expected to comment on Lawrence's report this Friday.

Education '80

By H.H. McCarthy

Direction '80 began Friday night, with a salute, but highly informative look at Education in America.

Moderator Floyd Kalber, of NBC News, opened to discussion with a simple, but very effective comment on the purpose of Direction '80. "We are examining the state of America, and the state of Americans." If we apply what Mr. Kalber meant to education, by the words of our president, Education in America is in an unfortunate state.

In response to Mr. Kalber's first question, "What purpose should education serve," Dr. Max Rafferty,

Dean of Troy State Teachers College and expert, claimed that education "...[is] learning to use the intricate code which the human race has deemed important and necessary."

To Rafferty, who is an outspoken and vociferous of strong fundamental teaching techniques (teaching the basics), "teaching the basics."

Surprisingly, the other members of the Education Panel agreed with Rafferty. Joseph Calliano, former secretary of NETA, was the first to agree, but also noted that Education must "teach people how to be productive, how to get and keep a job."

DIRECTION

The word "DIRECTION" is written in a large, bold, sans-serif font. The letters "D", "I", "R", "E", and "C" are in a standard weight, while "T", "I", "O", and "N" are significantly larger and more prominent. To the right of the text is a graphic element consisting of a thick black line that curves downwards and ends in a downward-pointing arrowhead. This line passes behind a circular globe showing the Americas, which is also part of the graphic design.

American Society: Crisis of Change

In 1968, a group of Tulane students dissatisfied with the amount of contact between the outside world and themselves, put together a program called "Direction." Since that time, Tulanians and community members have had the opportunity to hear national figures such as Gerald Ford, William Buckley Jr., and Bella Abzug discuss pertinent socio-political issues.

The 1980 program, "American Society: A Crisis of Change," offered a four part series of panel discussions on Education, Working, Lifestyles, and the Government. Between the two weekends of debate, there was humorous relief from serious discussion with a theatre production by an improvisational group.

Direction '80 will surely be remembered by those who saw it as an outstanding and lively program. But for Direction's staff members, the thirteenth year of Tulane's popular speaker's symposium was an example of months of hard work and effort nearly spoiled by an unusual streak of bad luck.

From the outset, Direction '80 "American Society: A Crisis of Change," appeared as though it was going to be another highly successful addition to a tradition of excellence. The students involved in the program busied themselves with selecting top notch panelists and moderators. By the beginning of March, the final details were being smoothed out, and all was set for opening night.

Despite the usual preparations, though, Direction, which for so long had boasted sellouts and standing room only as well as very favorable publicity, incurred several strange problems.

Ticket sales were sluggish, and empty seats were painfully obvious opening night. Worse yet, Jessica Savitch of NBC and CBS Radio newscaster Lee Thorton bowed out at the last minute. The Direction committee was left to scramble for replacements within a week of the program's opening. Floyd Kalber of NBC and Bettina Gregory of ABC stepped in for Savitch and Thorton.

Direction '80 staff members also had to withstand premature criticism from the Hullabaloo, remaining undaunted in their efforts to provide a fine program. Front page headlines such as "Sparse Crowds Baffle Direction '80 Staff" and "Second Moderator Bows Out," along with a Hullabaloo editorial entitled "A Crisis of No Change," hit the newstands just as the fourth night of Direction Began. And that night as well as the next closed in typical Direction style: both were sellouts.

Education

Dr. Norman Francis

The first night of Direction is like the opening performance of a Broadway play. The actors, or panelists, drive up in front of the quaint old theatre and step out of their limos, accompanied by eager Direction staffers. Security is tight, and if an excited spectator ventures too close to one of the guests, he is rebuffed by a peer with an official card pinned to his coat, or by one of Tulane's finest. At about 7:30 a press conference is held so that the local media can get a view of the evening's activities without actually attending. By 8:00, more or less, it's showtime, and the panelists take the stage for a lively mixture of comic and serious commentaries on the state of American society.

Direction '80 opened with the usual degree of fanfare and high expectations. The stage was set for a discussion on Education in American, and the blue ribbon panel included Joseph Califano, former secretary of HEW; educational reformer, Jonathan Kozol; Dr. Max Rafferty, Troy State's Dean of Education; and Xavier president Dr. Norman Francis. Floyd Kalber of NBC news moderated the panel, probing the members with questions and sitting back to hear them bicker, fight and debate every aspect of education.

The evening was marked by colorful outbursts and eloquent debate, with most discussion on the present state of education and why it is or isn't working. From the beginning Rafferty dominated the discussion with his traditionally conservative assertions. "After twenty years we're finally coming around to a definite definition of Education," he declared. "Education has always been using the intellectual tool. I'm not talking about 'relevance,' that's what's wrecked (the educational system)." As an educator of teachers, Rafferty placed most of the responsibility for educational problems on the failure of the teacher training system during the past ten to fifteen years.

"The teacher institutions are the villains," he told the other panelists. "They have been producing starry-eyed and enthusiastic ignoramouses."

Max Rafferty

Califano and Kozol, however — both well versed in society's contribution to problems in education — emphasized the need for overall community changes.

"I don't think we can ask the schools to do too much," Califano commented.

Kozol described a vicious cycle of social problems, all of which contributed to conditions in the educational system, and which in turn were affected by these very same problems. He concluded: "I agree that we can't ask the schools to do too much, but it would be cowardly to ask them to do too little."

Francis cited the "complexity of the questions."

"We just can't say that it's the teacher's fault," he remarked.

One of the most controversial issues touched on was the use of religion in schools. Kozol and Rafferty were the most outspoken on these topics, with expected stands. Kozol stood totally against the use of form of religion in schools, and brought up the Massachusetts Supreme Court ruling against prayer in public educational systems, referring to this decision as a "good deed."

"I see nothing wrong with spontaneous meditation," asserted Rafferty in response to Kozol's comments. He also brought up the subject of teaching creationism in schools. "There should be equal time for scientific and Biblical beliefs," he said.

Dr. Francis' expertise was put to use when the issue of the validity of testing came up. According to Francis, who sat on the board of the College Testing Service, "There is a great misunderstanding of tests and testing. The SAT's are only intended to aid in the transfer from high school to college."

Predictably, Kozol was opposed to the SAT's, claiming that they "were not the best test possible." He also cited the existence of special courses that prepare richer students for the exams.

"We can test forever," he declared, "but in the back of it are human beings whose lives are going to waste."

Kozol's points brought most of the panelists to a general consensus that the educational system must be changed to meet the needs of Americans in the next decades.

"We must learn . . ." Francis stated, "the young people are important, and we are going to insist that they be taught."

Jon Kozol

Working

Joseph Canizaro

"Anyone can be successful," said Joseph Canizaro, a self-made New Orleans millionaire. "Just too many people rely on social programs." His comments helped initiate lively discussion during the second night's panel on "Working."

Shana Alexander, known for her debates with James Kilpatrick on CBS's "60 Minutes", moderated the group, which also included Sol Chaikin of the Ladies' Garment Workers Union, Studs Terkel, author, and John A. Murphy, former chairman of the board of Gateway Transportation. The evening's discussion concentrated on the hard work ethic, worker alienation, mechanization, and the woman's place in the employment game.

From the beginning, it appeared as though it would be an interesting evening, with Canizaro and Murphy providing a conservative outlook, and Terkel and Chaikin countering with a more liberal attitude.

Canizaro's initial comments of the evening sparked the first debate.

"We live with myths and we've somehow got to face those myths and demolish them."

"Over 7% of the work class is unable to find work today," added Chaikin. "They exist."

Alliances on the panel shifted, however, when the subject of job satisfaction came up.

Terkel felt that few people are actually fully satisfied with the job that they have and the conditions under which the work. He asserted that he "hates polls" that point to the contrary, because the only way to understand how people feel "is to sit down and talk with them."

Studs Terkel

Shana Alexander

Joseph Canizaro

Sol Chaikin

"Job satisfaction involves many different facets," Chaikin said. "Job satisfaction for workers is not quite the same as for the college graduate . . . they (blue collar workers) are not as concerned with challenge." Chaikin concluded that the American worker, in general, is content, and the polls are correct.

Shana Alexander interrupted debate to focus on her favorite topic: women.

Chaikin continued to dominate the discussion, but he found himself frequently bickering with the moderator.

"Women have been channeled and are continuing to be channeled into jobs known as women's work . . . they earn 60% of what men earn," he said. ". . . they are breaking down doors . . . and they are doing it with the help of enlightened men."

Chaikin finally slipped, though, when Alexander asked him why women work.

"I don't believe that women work because they need the job," he declared.

"It astounds me that the famous leader of a Ladies Garment Union doesn't know why women work," Alexander quipped.

A few final comments on the possibility of a four day work week and an overview of American workers ended the discussion.

"Can we get to the point where we have a half hour work-week? Murphy asked the panel, evoking laughter from the audience.

In response to Murphy's statements, Terkel stressed the need to trust the judgment of the individual and to allow each person to create his own bounds for working. "Maybe work needs to be redefined," he said.

And of course no one could agree on a new definition, but all conceded that the concept of work is changing and will continue to adapt to new lifestyles.

John Murphy

The Next Move Theatre

There are always at least two sides to every issue, and for its mid-week fare Direction '80 chose to explore the lighter side, as the Next Move Theatre gave its interpretation of the theme "American Society: Crisis of Change."

The Next Move is witty, funny, if not slightly irreverent improvisational group from Chicago. Relying on suggestions shouted from the audience, the five group members quickly developed sketches based on the suggestions and somehow reflecting today's American society.

At the mention of money, the group became a Direction panel discussing the topic. Forming a typically diverse panel was a Tulane Student who searches for new ways to spend his parent's money, a man who hasn't paid income taxes in 45 years and advocates prison as the best way to beat inflation, and an IRS agent wondering how the government can tax "dumping."

The next topic offered the group was "chemistry," which resulted in the IRS agent performing his Leon Redbone imitation, mourning the loss of his love to organic chemistry in a soulful blues song.

The program continued in the same vein for an hour and a half, with sketches touching everything from photography to foreign films. Though the group at times might analyze a topic from an angle unfamiliar to some of the audience, they could enjoy the evening knowing that before long they would be laughing hysterically at another sketch.

Probably the best received sketch of the night had two group members on one side of the stage improvising dialogue and sound effects for a low grade science fiction flick, while two other members on the opposite side acted the scene out, mouthing the words slightly out of time.

In its relatively short presentation, the Next Move Theatre was able to turn American society inside out and upside down, proving that indeed there is a lighter side to the weighty issues debated by the Direction panels.

Lifestyles

Jane Howard

The fourth night of Direction examined "Lifestyles: America at Home." Members of the panel concentrated on a broad range of domestic issues, especially those dealing with the moral fiber of American society.

Hugh Downs, anchorman of ABC's 20/20 magazine show, moderated the group, which boasted such personalities as Dr. Benjamin Spock, reknown pediatrician and child psychiatrist, Dick Gregory, comedian turned political activist, family expert Jane Howard, and Nora Ephron.

Dick Gregory dominated the group throughout most of the evening. His statement: "The problem is not racism, sexism, or the difference between rich and poor — America is becoming morally and spiritually bankrupt," touched off a series of meaningful discussions about women, the media, family life, and old people.

While most of the panelists agreed that there were indeed problems within the American society, not all agreed on what was the most pressing concern or the solution as to any of them.

"Journalism is an advertising supplement and our lives are becoming advertising supplements," lamented Ephron, pointing out what she thought was the major problem in American society.

"There is a deficiency disease in spiritualism nourishment," said Spock, attributing this problem to a "yearning for change."

"We're such an insecure people," observed Gregory. "We've tried everything else in America but "self."

In response to Gregory's emphasis on self-discovery, Ephron pointed out the concerns of those dissatisfied with the "generation." "The search for self runs counter to change," she told the panel. "Things don't change unless you make them change." Ephron emphasized the "inner meaning beyond the self."

Nora Ephron

Hugh Downs

Gregory, though, felt that there are a "degree of cycles that things must go through," pointing out the need for "patience."

Spock countered with a statement that America must "face the realities" in its society and stop the "reactions" that hinder necessary change. "Where are all the liberal people?" he asked. "Maybe things have to get really horrible before people wake up."

Most of the panelists felt that change was dependent upon political power for the group seeking constructive alternatives to their present condition.

Using the example of the ageism problem in America, Spock preferred political activism on the part of senior citizens to a gradual realization on the part of younger people.

Gregory, making light of the topic, declared: "Never hit your children — it's your children who are going to put you in an old folks home." He stressed the need for cooperation on the part of the younger generation to ease the pain of growing old.

"Listen to them (old people)," he said. "If you'll just keep your mouth shut you'll see the beauty . . . leave a piece of time open. Start now . . . I hope we have the compassion . . ."

The evening concluded with a few brief observations on the state of American society and the problems and changes of the future. Most discussion was philosophical in tone, but the ideas expressed left the audience satisfied.

Spock called the American people "a race that copes."

Gregory declared: "There will be a shift in the wind — we can save it."

And Hugh Downs concluded with the most hopeful of all statements. "maybe humans are tougher than we believe," he said. "Maybe humanity's will to survive is more than we think."

Dr. Benjamin Spock

Government

John Ehrlichman

The fifth and final night of Direction '80 was actually a prelude to the future. Social commentators and political observers caucused on the state of America's government.

Saturday's panel was a smorgasbord of familiar faces, both notorious and welcomed. The panel included exconvict and ex-White House aid John Ehrlichman, pollster George Gallup Sr., Richard Reeves, editor of Esquire Magazine, and arch-conservative William Rusher. The participants were moderated by ABC White House correspondent Betina Gregory.

Discussion centered around presidential politics, and with the 1980 elections close at hand, all of the panelists had an equal amount to contribute.

Reeves began with a statement that presidential politics are the politics of incompetence."

While no one actually disagreed with Reeves' comment or tried to refute it, the members of the panel still discussed both the merits and downfalls of the probable candidates. All agreed that the primary selection process was all but over, and that Reagan and Carter would challenge each other in the upcoming election.

"Carter is a President without a clear definition of policy," asserted Ehrlichman. According to him, the Carter administration is always "figuring out where a crisis fits," instead of "fitting a crisis in with a general philosophy."

"This administration has never been able to react quickly," continued Ehrlichman. "That's been the story with a lot of the problems we've had."

Dr. George Gallup, Sr

William Rusher

Richard Reeves

Rusher, in agreement with Ehrlichman, diagnosed the primary problem of the Carter administration as a case of "reacting to situations," and not acting.

Reeves disagreed, seeing the President's moves more as political actions," than anything else.

In response to the idea of political motivations causing trouble within a presidential administration, Gallup presented the idea of one six year term for the presidency.

"He wouldn't have to think about his re-election, then," Gallup pointed out, "but what his place in history would be."

Turning their attention to then front-running Republican Ronald Reagan, most of the panelists felt that he was unelectable unless unforeseen circumstances altered Carter's standing.

Rusher, the stalwart conservative and Reagan supporter, stuck by the supposed Republican candidate as well as the party itself, although he said of the latter that "it has the staying power of any large inert mass."

Reeves predicted a Carter win in the fall, but admitted that "events could change" his prognosis, such as the possibility of Congressman John Anderson running as an independent.

"The country is taking a distinct moderate step to the right," Rusher said, concluding with his hopes for the Presidential race as well as the future of America.

Betna Gregory

Direction

William Rusher

William Rusher is quite an old hand in the Direction program. He has appeared several times during Direction's thirteen years and his familiar archconservative views guaranteed to keep any panel hopping. His presence at Direction '80 was especially timely because of his extensive knowledge of presidential politics.

Rusher has the ability to look a hostile interviewer in the eye, lean back, and espouse ideas farther right than the scale allows. He is just next to Barry Goldwater in political ideology, and proud of it.

"We face a real serious question about the viability of democracy," he says, voicing his concern about the electoral process in America.

"I recommend a literacy test in order to register people to vote. I heard recently that in California they took a whole busload of mentally retarded people and registered them to vote. That is a step away from rationality."

"A literacy test should be essential," he repeated, feeling the need to drive home the point for the benefit of a young reporter. His beliefs are sincere but conscientious, and he seems to thrive on their controversial nature.

"If a person doesn't want to learn how to read — OK. He shouldn't be able to vote. I'm not talking about a blind person who is unable to learn to read . . ."

"A person who cannot read is constitutionally unable to participate in our system, just as a quadraplegic is unable to fly an airplane."

Turning his attention toward his favorite topic, the upcoming presidential race, Rusher lent his full support to Ronald Reagan. A longtime associate of Reagan, Rusher saw the former governor of California as the likely candidate for victory in the race. Of former President Ford, he said: "I think he, 'Ford', would have been less formidable than Reagan . . . Ford shares responsibility for the current economic situation."

"Reagan is in a position to act freshly," he added. Reagan is in a more flexible situation."

Not that Reagan is on the conservative side of most issues. Rusher concluded that the Republican party would have to use extreme caution in "ticket balancing." Bush would be one possibility for the vice-presidency," he remarked.

Even if Reagan is elected in the fall, though, Rusher is glum about the immediate future of the nation. Because "the basic mechanism of inflation was for many years not well understood," according to Rusher, solving the problem of the economy will be no easy deal. The obvious remedy to inflation, Rusher felt, is "taking money out of the federal budget."

"But just cutting the budget will not result in the absolute end of inflation," Rusher said. He foresees in the near future "a major depression."

Interviews

Studs Terkel

Studs Terkel, the blushing romantic journalist/broadcaster/author, provided the "Working" segment of Direction '80 with a breezy intellectual contrast to the hard "dollars and sense" attitude favored by his counterparts on the panel. Most famous for several books, among them Working, a bulky collection of on-the-street interviews taken from the mouths of America's working force — Terkel stressed "work satisfaction" as the secret to creating harmony between workers and their employers.

Terkel concerns himself with the psychological aspect of problems that all workers face and voice. He has noted repeatedly that superficially, workers appear satisfied with their work. When probed further, however, their replies reflect complaints that they have long overlooked or stifled because they face more immediate economic pressures. Worst of all, many employers feel trapped by their work.

"Thousands of people will fight for an assembly-line job; but once they get it they are trapped," Terkel emphasized. "Workers go home at night — they get drunk — they take a vacation — they do anything they can to escape what they go through at the office."

Terkel went on to criticize modern technology. "Work is people making things. Now the escalating trend is for things (machines, computers) to make things. Maybe we should return to the idea of work involving person to person interaction, instead of dealing with work as primarily a person to thing relationship."

As Terkel reminded his audience, "Work is essential to all human beings." And with this in mind, Terkel leaned forward to sharpen his point. "If work is of no meaning, life is of no meaning."

Terkel elaborated on this theme with one of his infamous analogies: "Look at jazz musicians. When a jazz player plays lousy, he feels lousy as well. When a jazz player plays well, he feels good too." Terkel's simple logic hits home like a cleanly driven nail — one does not have to examine it to feel it.

Taking a more general perspective, Terkel revealed a little personal philosophy: "Wine is as important as bread," he suggested, with loud approval from his audience. "Furthermore, I still have faith in the human being. Our imagination is not yet tapped."

Studs Terkel has not yet tapped the farthest reaches of his own imagination either. In a brief interview, we discussed Terkel's upcoming book, which will be released in September. American Dreams — Lost and Found is the tentative title, borrowed from lines in the traditional folk hymn, "Amazing Grace."

Pondering a more purely philosophical theme than he has in previous works, Terkel now hopes to address one of the central questions in the public mind these days: "Is there still an American dream?"

While discussing with Terkel whether an American dream still existed as such, I was reminded of his earlier remark about myths. "We as Americans live with myths. Truth and fact are two things. We have to somehow face those myths and demolish them." The truth is, if anyone can find the answers, can demolish the myths surrounding the American dream, Studs Terkel is our man.

The Tulane University Video Access Center has become the archives of campus life. It serves as a free, Black/White, and color video outlet for the student body. TUVAC is equipped with a wide range of sophisticated camera and development setups, and can be used both as a portable access and color production center.

Through TUVAC, students have produced and taped several important campus events of the past year. From the Tulanians, Jack Anderson, and Direction' 80 to the Intramural sports games, TUVAC was there to cover them and put them on tape.

THE CREED OF THE COLLEGE OF ARTS AND SCIENCES

We are of Art of Science. We endeavor to make of our art a science and to make our science an art. We create a concordance, a creed for ourselves in which can be joined these two ways. United within us, within each of us, art and science give birth to a child: a harmony that holds our values which will be shaped by years. We raise the child above us.

Therefore, within this concordance:

We apply science and art, together, not as things, but as ways.

We bind ourselves to nature, to its essence and quintessence; to stand within it and not against it; to create a place within which our child can thrive.

We care for the lives of faith and of reason, for feeling and for thought; not to let one outlive the other.

We use the curiosity we cannot suppress to overwhelm the ignorance we cannot hide.

We feel the space and the frame; we use the circle and the tangent; we observe equally with microscope, kaleidoscope, and mirror.

We know the order that is imposed. We seek the order that is hidden.

We simplify. We civilize. We inspire. We create. We perfect.

In this, we justify ourselves and know that we must justify ourselves, always.

Many Tulane University students have heard of or have volunteered in CACTUS projects. The large proportion which volunteer — large compared to other schools' volunteer groups — have done so because of the great diversity and breadth of CACTUS activities. Students learned first-hand about environmental dangers, education of youth and older persons, psychiatric treatment, and social issues.

By volunteering in a CACTUS project, students diversified and added depth to their education. They have discovered how to apply concepts learned in the classroom and how one academic discipline touches upon many others in practice.

While applying classroom learning in the community they also develop the skills required after graduation: organizational skills, methods in interpersonal relations and a concrete understanding of how societal problems affect us all.

Only minor aspects of the volunteers' learning experiences are immediately visible. The major aspects — the personal attributes and the interpersonal skills acquired — are only indirectly apparent. These invaluable qualities become evident as students progress through their education, career, and life in general.

Tulane Investment Club

The Tulane Investment Club performs a unique role in the university community, that of providing a link between the theoretical world of the classroom and the real world of profit and loss through speculation in stocks, bonds, gold, and options. It allows students to realize the big difference between what a professor says in class, and what exists beyond the realms of the non-competitive academic community.

The Tulane Investment Club asks the proverbial question, "If this teacher knows so much, why can't he use it to his advantage and be wealthy?" The answer lies in the fact that the world doesn't reward intelligence, but rather performance.

The Tulane Investment Club is open to all segments of the community regardless of race, creed, sex, or their stand on apartheid sports. We do support South African investments because a dollar is where you find it and the wise man never lets his politics interfere with his "love life" or his pocketbook. Anyway, we wouldn't kick a South African out of the organization for eating crackers at a conference table!

In closing, the words of our founder Hyden Srtoke money seem appropriate, "Bulls make money, bears can make money, but pigs go only to slaughter."

English majors concerned with the lack of familiarity among the students and faculty of one of Tulane's largest departments joined forces to form an "English Club" during the fall semester. After the initial meetings the following goals were set: to provide a medium of communication between students and faculty in a relaxed, informal environment, to provide social events, to supply students with information on career and graduate school opportunities, to inform the students of community and English related activities, and finally to sponsor English Club programs.

The students set to work right away in fulfilling these goals, providing fun and interesting activities throughout the year. These events included creative writing workshops, a faculty/student end of the semester party, a faculty/student softball game, and a coffee house. After its first year, the English Club had established itself as an organization fighting student/faculty apathy.

Town Students

During Orientation in August, 1979, a group of town students met to discuss their future. Problems of commuter students, such as the difficulties of returning to campus for meetings and activities as well as the problem of communication among themselves and within the university, were vocalized. The discussion did not end there however. A group of interested town students decided to expand their committee status on the Newcomb Senate by holding activities and making efforts to foster communication. Officers were elected:

Edie Rosen, President
 Angela Paolini, Secretary
 Laura Michaelis, Publicity
 Bam Viloria, Social Director

Activities this year included a party at Dean Wittig's house, a carwash, and intramurals in volleyball, basketball, and softball.

Since town students are in the city during the summer, they can play a vital role in Orientation. Therefore, plans were made to give the Town Students a large part in Orientation '80. This would give the group of students the opportunity to utilize their knowledge of the city to help with the problems facing the incoming freshman.

Fencing

Members of Tulane's Fencing Club work hard at becoming adept in the art of dueling, or more accurately, swordmanship.

Fencing as a sport requires the utmost devotion and long hours of practice. Tulane fencers put in ten hours or more a week on the practice strip to prepare themselves for various competitions throughout the year.

This year's Fencing Club sponsored three major regional competitions during the fall and spring and had a very satisfying year.

The coed Tulane team chosen for the first competition of the year, in October, finished second overall, in spite of the fact that all the fencers on the team were under nineteen.

The Mardi Gras Fencing Tournament was a huge success, drawing participants from all over the South. Unfortunately, Tulane did not do as well as hoped, but still put in a strong showing.

The club also participates in several out of town engagements each year, not to mention many in-club contests.

water around the natural obstacles of rocks and trees, Broadening your horizons by seeing the places where a retreat from the city sets the mind at ease,
Camping under the sea of stars in the Mexican desert along the Rio Grande,
Gazing at the 1500 foot walls of the Santa Elena Canyon knowing that once you enter there is only one way out,
Having your heart pound as you pick your way through the rushing white water of North Carolina,
Feeling tired but satisfied after a long day.

The rain pours down and we walk to class under umbrellas with our books in plastic bags. Classes end, and still the rain pours down. We carry our shoes and roll up our jeans, splashing through puddles. The rain continues to pour down, and we go outside to slide in the mud on the quad, getting wet and filthy and loving it. Cars start to float down McAlister Drive, and still the rain pours down. No one really cares though, after all, this is New Orleans.

School Days

"Hi, What's your name? Where are you from? Why did you come to Tulane? What dorm are you staying in? How's your roommate? Where's the U.C.? What's your major? Can I borrow your Norton Reader? I just don't understand, I used to get A's in high school."

Hanging out on the quad. "Where did all these dogs come from and why do they have bandanas around their necks? Let's play frisbee. How do you throw this thing?" U.C. step sitting or staring out your dorm room window. "What am I doing here?"

Eating on campus, an unforgettable experience. The Parlor: "Two scoops of cottage cheese and a 'Tab'." The Rat: "A pepperoni pizza and a pitcher of beer." The cafeteria: "What is it? Never mind, I'd rather not know."

The hidden treasures of the U.C. Clubs and organizations, A.S.B., Publication Alley. Worthless items in the bookstore, charged home. "A barbershop? A pool room. A pool! Is it ever open?"

Why's that boat in a glass case?" Entertainment on campus: concerts, movies, speakers, T.G.I.F.s. You can always watch it rain.

Checking the mail — for the fourth time that day. "Well, they might have had a late delivery." On to the library to study — each other. "The Boot? O.K., but just one drink and then I really have to hit the books."

Football season. "A coat and tie to a football game? A Hell of a Hull a ba — what?! What did they mean when they said we were 'Tiger bait'?"

Food and alcohol — two unsurpassed pleasures in New Orleans. "What do you mean there are washing machines in the back of the bar? Jed? Wasn't he on the Beverly Hillbilly's? If I made up the name of the drink, will they still know how to make it at Nick's?" Omelettès at the Grill, shrimp po' boys at Domilise's, salads at Baxters. "How was I supposed to know that dressed meant with mayonnaise? A cold drink? We used to call them sodas!" Dirty floors, chipping paint, and the best food you ever tasted.

Mardi Gras. "A two week party? I don't believe it." Drinking and sequins, and drinking and face-paint, and drinking and silly costumes, and drinking and parades, and doubloons and beads and more drinking. "Throw me something mister! Can't somebody tell me where a bathroom is?" More parades and more drinking and Fat Tuesday. "Alright, now I believe in two week parties. Where the hell is the car?"

Money problems. "I don't know what happened, just last week I had a positive balance in my checking account! A short term student loan?"

How do you get the money to pay it back?" To the Bursar with a rescue check from home. "Sorry, I forgot my I.D. Can't you just write down the number? But I waited on line for half an hour!" Sorry, do not pass go. Do not collect two hundred dollars.

Spring time. Lying in the sun listening to music. "The books? They make great pillows!" The festivals — traveling to remote parts of Louisiana — "Where's Pontchatoula?" New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival — so much talent in one place. "What do the Neville Brothers, Pete Seeger and Gatmouth Brown have in common? B.B. King? Fats Domino? I've heard of them! Look at all this mud! Are topsiders washable?" Wishing for the beach. "Pensacola? I really have to study. Oh well, maybe I can bring my notes!"

Finals — a mass migration to the Howard Tilton Memorial Library. "A 'C'? Oh well, I knew the teacher didn't like me." Exams end, and all wordly possessions are sold, lost, given away or packed up for next year. "Fun? I guess I had a good time. I wish August would hurry up and get here!"

It happens at about the same time every year. The papers and reading assignments are mounting up, most of us are either trashing an old romance or embarking upon a new one, (it really makes no difference) and we need to escape, even for just a little while. Spring break is perfectly timed and Pensacola becomes Tulane's answer to "Where the Boys Are."

The yearly scenario is always the same. Classes let out, and by Friday morning the campus is deserted. Simultaneously, the parking lots around Pensacola's "Howard Johnson's", "The Tiki", and "The Holiday Inn" are jammed with a multitude of autos sporting New York plates. By early afternoon the beach is filled with sickly looking pale student types — desperately rubbing oils all over each other in a gallant effort to burn off those shades of winter white. There's something odd about oily pale skin, although I've never been able to quite put my finger on it. Late in the afternoon, the pale hue finally disappears. It's quite a relief.

After a round of showers most of us flock to the "Hojo's" or that cheap smorgasboard place that makes you pay extra for food you leave on your plate. We admire our tans after dinner and those of us who haven't fallen asleep head out to the local hot spots to try to pick up girls from LSU, or Arkansas, or Texarkana, or someplace like that. Won't anyone ever realize that those empty-headed skinny blondes aren't the least bit interested in scrawny little Jewish boys from TU?!

So, if you didn't bring a sweetheart of your own, you should realize by Saturday morning that your big weekend of sun, sand, surf and sex is really a big weekend of sun, sand and surf. Make the best of it.

Nevertheless, it is the perfect getaway. The sands are the whitest imaginable and the water is cool and crystal clear. If you choose your company carefully, (never go with more than thirteen of your best friends and don't share a room with anyone too nerdy) you can return Monday golden brown with a fresh outlook on life.

And no matter what, you're gonna peel.

Rock On Marathon

Inclement weather produced a soggy yet successful 10th annual WTUL "Rock on Survival" marathon. Although the event had to be moved inside to the Kendall Cram Room, an air of festivity prevailed throughout the weekend. Three days of beer and electrifying music kept people's spirits high, despite the rain.

The marathon is an effort made by WTUL to solicit donations which help to keep non-commercial radio alive in New Orleans. Under the guidance of General Manager John Poche, and with the help of TUCP, the station assembled some of the finest musical talent around, bringing both the best local bands, and a top national act to Tulane to help raise the needed funds.

Three disc-jockeys stayed on the air for twenty four hours each, playing requests in return for pledges. Despite terrible weather, bouncing phonograph needles and drunk supporters, Maurice Roe, Ruth Presaff and John Rodwig managed to survive, and to somehow actually enjoy their long shifts. Inside the Cram Room, other members of the station staff handled donations, and food, beer and t-shirt sales.

All that was left was the music. The Cartoons, a popular local band and formerly part of The Rhapsodizers, kicked things off Friday afternoon.

Dale Levy

Their rock 'n roll set started the rowdiness that prevailed throughout the weekend. Lil' Queenie and the Percolaters, still fresh from a very successful New York tour, played next. Leigh Harris, their dynamic lead singer soon had everyone ready to party all night. After a long and wild set, the band finished and everyone left eagerly anticipating the following day of music.

Torrential rain fell most of Saturday. The WTUL staff had the arduous task of moving the outdoor DJ set-up inside and out as the weather varied. However, it was all done with the good spirit of the Marathon. The music that day started with "The Tardy Boys." The band consists of some of the city's finest jazz musicians: James Rivers, Dave Torkanowsky, James Singleton and John Vidacovich. The crowd began arriving during their set and were treated to an hour of superb jazz that ended with Rivers coming off the stage while playing some wild saxophone.

The Radiators, the other part of The Rhapsodizers, followed The Tardy Boys. Because the lead singer, Ed Volker, was absent from the band, they appeared as The Malones, with guitarist Dave Malone's wife Susie singing lead vocals. People who had never heard her sing before were pleasantly surprised as she and the band joined together, thoroughly entertaining the now large crowd. The rain fell outside and the beer flowed inside, as Balloons bearing The WTUL logo floated through the air.

The Malones were followed by NRBQ, the New Rhythm and Blues Quartet, sponsored by TUCP. Their zany antics, along with their fine music had the packed room wild. For their very first New Orleans appearance, they played wearing satin bathrobes. They knew it was a giant party, and played that way. The crowd kept people from dancing, but they still managed to jump up and down, and bop in place. When the nearly two hour set ended, everyone had had their fill of beer and music for the day.

Although Sunday was a magnificent day, the Quad was still too wet to accomodate all the people. Joyride, put together by George Porter, former bassist for The Meters, was the first band to play. Their mixture of funk and rock, improved through their set, peaking right at the end. This was the perfect introduction for the next band, The Neville Brothers.

Bringing their special form of funk to The Cram Room, The Nevilles were undoubtedly the band the crowd had been waiting for. They sang along on almost every song and clapped to the rest.

Dale Levy

The beer ran out before the Nevilles finished, but nobody minded. When the show ended, the marathon was over. All the preparation, hard work and hours of planning had been rewarded. Not only did WTUL do an excellent job raising money, they provided Tulane with a superb party, and it seemed as if a small portion of the final applause at the Bonnie Raitt concert that night was also for WTUL and its marathon.

LET OUR PEOPLE GO

As the 70s were drawing to a close, Tulane students, like their counterparts across the country, were most concerned with seemingly mundane issues such as future careers, inflation, and recession. But in early November, a series of events began that would tear student's attention from home and focus it on a far away corner of the globe.

On November 4, 1979, Muslim students stormed the United States embassy in Tehran, Iran, capturing the American personnel stationed there, and initiating what would become a lengthy test of wills between the nations. This action sparked an outpouring of patriotism across the country, coupled with an outpouring of hatred towards Iran and the many Iranians living here.

These emotions were mirrored on campuses from coast to coast. Ayotollah Khomeini was burned in effigy before a large, vocal crowd at Lamar State University. At the University of Wisconsin, Iranian students were pelted with eggs, and at UCLA over 500 people attended an anti-Iran rally.

These anti-Iranian protests found a definite, though muted, expression on the Tulane campus when a group of almost 30 students demonstrated outside the U.C. on Thursday, November 15. Carrying signs declaring "50,000 Iranians aren't worth 90 Americans," and "We're not war mongers, but we're also not chicken," the group paraded for nearly 45 minutes in front of a large crowd of onlookers and local television cameras.

"We're just showing that we support the United States government and whatever they have to do," stated Chuck Russo, an organizer of the march. Another leader, Kerry Kecaie, explained that the protesters were "not trying to suggest policy, we're not anti-Iranian." But the frustration of those marching, and apparently of the many watching, was best summed up by one demonstrator who asked "how can we let the Iranians manipulate us into this position?" The march, monitored by Tulane security guards, ended quietly. No more demonstrations surfaced on campus.

As the crisis in Iran mitigated into a stalemate, events in neighboring Afghanistan again clouded the future for many college students. Ignoring warnings from the American government, the Russians moved into Afghanistan with a full military force to take over the country. In a series of "get tough" measures designed to show America's resolve against the Soviet actions, President Carter halted grain sales to Russia, proposed boycotting the Olympics, and of great concern to college students, sent Congress a plan calling for the reinstatement of registration for the draft.

Immediately, the draft became much discussed, and the butt of several morbid jokes on college campuses. Instead of Khomeini, draft cards were now burned in effigy. But these protests were not necessarily supported by a majority of students.

At Tulane, a poll The Hullabaloo published on February 1 indicated that 52 percent of those questioned would fight in a foreign country to protect America's interest. Only 39 percent claimed they would refuse to fight, and nine percent were undecided.

Opinions of those students against the draft were characterized by one A&S sophomore who said that he was "pretty upset that the government feels they have the power to enlist your support to something which you may or may not support, depending on your basic philosophy of life. If you don't support the war, why should you be forced to sign up to participate? I kind of feel like the government is taking your life in their hands." The majority of people responding, however, indicated that if registration was necessary to protect the country, they would indeed sign up.

Three weeks later, the draft was still a prominent concern at Tulane, and was chosen as the topic for the annual A&S symposium. A panel of experts debated the issue before a small crowd gathered in Dixon Hall. Members of the crowd were more than willing to express their views on the subject, most of which were against the draft. Most students in the audience favored a war for defensive purposes, but questioned the validity of fighting over a natural resource — oil. Though some panel members stressed the importance of oil and the possibly devastating effects of an oil cutoff, the audience remained unconvinced. One student questioned "can we really guarantee the flow of oil with what may become millions of lives?"

As the weeks passed, however, Iran and Afghanistan ceased to capture front page headlines, and Carter's draft registration plan became mired in Congress. Once again, for the moment, students seemed more concerned with inflation, recession, and their future careers.

ARCHITECTURE

Gene Koss

John Foley

A far cry from the Wisconsin of his youth, New Orleans has been good to Gene Koss. Noted for his work in both clay and glass, he spends a lot of time traveling across the country to exhibit his work. The early part of 1980 has kept him on the run with one man shows in addition to numerous larger exhibits.

But Gene's midwest farm boy roots continue to show through. Any insomniac who might be passing through the basement of the Art Building at 7:00 AM will undoubtedly see or hear bizarre things coming from the neighborhood of his studio. His work shows a strong influence from the American pastoral, especially his work in glass, which is distinctive for the use of many tools fabricated from various parts of farm tools.

John Foley

In action, Gene is a spectacle. When working with molten glass, and handling tools that are heated to a thousand degrees, timing is critical. Wasted seconds can confound hours of preparation. Dressed to protect himself from the intense heat, curses fly over the everpresent Springsteen music blaring in the background. It is rumored that he is incapable of working without it.

Gene's efforts have built the only glass studio in the region, and one of the largest college studios in the country.

What lies in the future for Gene Koss? In what direction is his work taking him? Perhaps he himself does not know for sure. The direction of his art is changing daily. One thing is for certain, he will continue to work hard for the sake of his art.

 To Be,
 It's Me.

Crisis, Change, Creation, Stipulation,
 All or None; a Little Bit of Some;
 Tribulation,
 Evaluation,
 Convocation,
 Jubilation.

"Tulane has educated me academically, socially, and practically, primarily outside of the classroom. Experience here has robbed me of most of my naiveté."

"Unbelievable competition here for students and a tremendous amount of unpredictable changes are inevitable for Tulane. How the members of the Tulane community act and react under the upcoming circumstances will determine the school's success."

"Tulane has given me the opportunity to grow, both intellectually and socially. By becoming involved in extra-curricular affairs, I have acquired the meaning of interacting with people successfully. All in all, Tulane has meant that the past three years of my life were lived to the fullest — I am looking forward to the fourth."

"Our university through the outstanding administration will be considered one of the top universities in the nation. Our intercollegiate athletic program will be considered with the likes of Ohio State, Alabama and USC. The student body will consist of the 'best and the brightest.' And our alumni (through the efforts of Terry Jones) will give generously to our Tulane. The 1980's will be Tulane's finest decade."

"Besides the usual — maturing, close friends, females, alcohol etc. — Tulane meant involvement. Involvement in student activities mainly TUVAC, which taught me more than any other aspect of the university."

"Tulane is going into the eighties on an upbeat. If it can raise the necessary money and continue to attract the right students then the momentum already achieved will produce substantial accomplishments. The only thing that stands in the way of Tulane is Tulane."

 "Though the faces and facts will come and be gone, Tulane holds a promise for the future of that which it has provided in the past. It is a promise that each student can reach the goals for which he or she works . . . a promise that everyone leaves changed for better or worse."

"The next ten years hold great promise for Tulane University. A capable administration led by President Hackney, has taken the necessary, however seemingly austere, measures to bolster Tulane through the lean years ahead. With just a little luck, Tulane should reaffirm its position as one of the pre-eminent Universities in the country."

"Tulane, the institution, and Tulane, the experience, are two different, yet interrelated dimensions of my personal maturation. Meeting the intellectual, social, and spiritual challenges presented by Tulane has given me an insight into the limits of my character and the sincerity of my motives. I leave this university better than when I arrived and with an ardor and appreciation time will not diminish."

"The decade of the 1980's promises to be a critical one for this University. I am confident that Tulane will successfully pivot into the late 20th century on its feet and moving forward. My optimism is substantiated by the acquisition of some fine new administrative officials who demonstrate an intense desire to propel Tulane to collegiate preeminence."

Editor's Note

This year was a time of examination for the Jambalaya. It became evident to me and to those interested observers that the Jambalaya needed revitalization. After taking over in midstream, I have attempted to redefine and reorganize the Jambalaya and its inner workings.

There is a delicate balance that exists between how the Jambalaya staff perceives the school environment, and what the students feel should be included in the yearbook. In this book, I hope that everyone can find something to relate to, and to look back on from their years at Tulane. My goals have been to provide a diverse and all encompassing representation of the year, and to have it ready by registration. If you are reading this book while filling out add-drop slips, then I have accomplished all of my goals.

It has been a fun year for me, but definitely not an easy one. I would like to thank all those dedicated individuals who help put together this book. In particular, I could never give enough thanks to Eric Olaes, Jenny Juge, and Andrea Silver whom I would not even have attempted this book without. Also thanks to Laura Martin who always knew how to get the job done. There are also a great many section editors, photographers, and staff members who did an excellent job. Last but not least, I would like to give my sincere appreciation to Tammy, Nikki, and Mindy for all the help and moral support.

Since I have again been blessed next year with this task, all I can say is one down and one to go.
Until next year,
Bob Kottler
